

Certified Moisture Testing Has Gone to the Dogs.

Use of the dog pinpoints where intrusive testing is needed, limiting the number of test site locations.

Certified Moisture Testing (CMT) is now using scent detection dogs to locate potential moisture intrusion issues in homes and buildings. This unique application of a canine’s smelling abilities allows CMT’s moisture experts to identify wall areas where wood or insulation is wet or damaged.

CMT’s dogs are trained to identify the smells of wet wood, insulation, dry rot and other building materials, not mold. Dogs have been used successfully to locate mold in homes, but mold is the by-product of moisture. Identifying the source where moisture issues are occurring is our dogs’ specialty.

We chose the Lagotto Romagnolo, an Italian water dog, for its keen scent abilities. The primary purpose of the breed is to sniff and find Truffles (a fungus) underground. The Lagotto makes a great service dog as they are smaller in size, hypoallergenic, cuddly and friendly.

For any scent detection dog to be accurate, extensive training of the dog and handler must always be conducted. Our dogs and handlers are certified for scent detection through Alpha K-9 Training in Jackson Mississippi.

Alpha K-9 specializes in training detection dogs for Police, Military, SWAT and FBI teams. Alpha K-9 is impressed with the Lagotto’s skills in scent detection and our unique use for the dog.

Moisture issues are a threat to every homeowner’s investment. Water and even damage can be present yet be visually undetectable. Don’t underestimate your home’s potential for moisture problems!
